That s the extraordinary part of it. You speak most dispassionately of all sorts of moral lapses but it s only your brain that s concerned; never your body. Revette. For the reason that I have met no one that combines beauty, that is the introduction, with understanding, that is the invitation to the banquet, and intelligence that pours the wine. And when I shall find this rara avis, what shall he see in me? Marion. Well, I had some arguments that seemed excellent when I came in; but arguments that would appeal to any normal woman don t even interest you. Revette. Oh yes, they do. They interest me very much. You see I seem so natural to myself until I hear someone speak as you speak and then I begin to wonder whether I m mad, or whether the rest of the world is. Do you mind if I go on with my work? Marion. Not at all. I love to see you paint. I have an enormous admiration for any one that can paint. My face is as far as I have ever been able to get. As Revette is putting on a smock and preparing her materials Marion goes to the painting, which she regards for a moment or two. Well, he s certainly handsome. Revette. Yes. Do you like it? Marion. It s marvellous. Turning abruptly from painting. Oh, Lord! I wish I could do something....
